The publication of the Laws of the Union, for some time, has compelled us to withhold a variety of interesting matter, which at as early a period as possible we will endeavor to lay before our readers.

ANOTHER BATTLE.

We have just received an account of a fight which took place at Ridgeley's mill, near Black Creek Florida, between fifteen United States troops under command of Lieut. HERBERT, and a party of 25 Indians. Lieut. H. was on his way in the steam boat Essays to Picolata, when he arrived opposite the mill he concluded to land with nine of his men to make an examination of Mr. TRAVEN'S plantation, which had been destroyed by the savages the day previous, he had not proceeded far before he discovered signs of Indians, and immediately pursued and overtook them, in number between 15 and 20—he was soon joined by the remainder of his men—in the mean time the enemy were reinforced with 25 more warriors, when an action commenced which lasted for more than an hour, terminating in defeat of the Indians. Lieut. H. had five wounded—none dangerously. Six of the enemy were seen to fall, and the negro who acted as guide and who understood their language, said that he heard them call several times to carry off the wounded. As soon as Lieut. H. and his men had retired on board the steam boat, and was under way, the Indians re-appeared, and commenced firing upon them.

We are authorized to announce Capt. JAMES C. HALL as a candidate for Major of the upper battalion to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Major D. C. QUILLIS.

Another column will be found a letter from JOHN MARIA TORRES to the General-in-Chief of the Mexican Armies calling on him to assist in a stratagem which he says is necessary for the safety of the Republic, and recommends that the government be informed that it is the wish of the army for a Dictator to be appointed until Texas is restored. This is another proof of the dissensions which have been increasing for some time past in this country, and which is likely to involve it in a civil war.

It has been ascertained from some squaws captured in Lowndes county, that Capt. Beall had killed about sixty warriors in his engagement with the Indians at Chichasatchee swamp.

Mr. JOSEPH H. SPONS, who is at present in New York, has furnished the "Evening Star" with many interesting particulars concerning the battle, and unfortunate surrender, at Colleton, and the circumstances of the murder of his unfortunate fellow soldiers. SPONS was one of the Red River Volunteers attached to FANNIN'S command, who owes his escape, to a knowledge of the Spanish language, which made him necessary as an interpreter to the Mexicans. He was detained a prisoner with the Copano detachment, under Major Miller and others, who had been sent with their companies to Goliad. He was taken as coachman by Gen. URREA to Matamoros, where he got permission to enter the Mexican sea service, with a view to escape, which he effected at Vera Cruz.

It appears that on the 24th March, the unfortunate detachment was taken to the outside of the fort and formed into line, and the wounded dragged from their layers into the yard, under the pleasing anticipation of being conveyed to Copano, and from thence to the United States, but they were soon forced, by the unexpected report of musketry, on the outside of the fort, to abandon every other thought but that of meeting a premature death—which in a very few moments after, they met, apparently, without fear or trembling. Col. FANNIN was then led forth from his room, resting on the shoulder of SPONS, to a corner of the fort, when he was ordered to interpret to him the following sentence: "That, for having come with an armed band to commit depredations and revolutionize Texas, the Mexican government were about to chastise him."
"As soon as the sentence was interpreted to FANNIN, he asked if he could not see the commandant. The officer said he could not, and asked why he wished it. Col. FANNIN then pulled forth a valuable gold watch, he said belonged to his wife, and he wished to present it to the commandant. The captain then said he could not see the commandant, but if he would give him the watch he would thank him—and he repeated in broken English, "thank you—me thank you." Col. FANNIN told him he might have the watch if he would have him buried after he was shot, which the captain said should be done—"con tod as las formalidades necesarias"—at the same time smiling and bowing. Col. FANNIN then handed him the watch, and pulled out of his right pocket a small bead purse containing doubloons, the clasp of which was bent; he gave this to the officer, at the same time saying that it had saved his life, as the ball that wounded him had lost part of its force by striking the clasp, which it bent and carried with it into the wound; a part of a silk handkerchief which he had in his pocket, and which on drawing out drew forth with it the ball. Out of the left pocket of his overcoat, (being cold weather he had on one of India rubber) he took a piece of canvas containing a double handful of dollars, which he also gave to the officer. SPONS was then ordered to bandage his eyes, and Col. FANNIN handed him his pocket handkerchief. He proceeded to fold it, but being agitated he done it clumsily, when the officer snatched it from his hand and folded it himself, and led Col. FANNIN to sit down on a chair which was near and stepping behind him bandaged his eyes, saying to Col. FANNIN, in English, "good, good—meaning if his eyes were properly bound—to which FANNIN replied, "yes, yes." The captain then came in front and ordered his men to unbind their bayonets and approach Col. FANNIN; he hearing them near him, told SPONS to tell them not to place their muskets so near as to scorch his face with the powder.

"The officer standing behind them, after seeing their muskets were brought within two feet of his body, drew forth his handkerchief as a signal, when they fired, and poor FANNIN fell dead on his right side on the chair, and from thence rolled into a dry ditch, about three feet deep, close by the wall.

"Two or three days after SPONS was taken by Capt. Corono to the place outside the fort where his countrymen had been murdered and piled one upon the other, and partially burnt or roasted, presenting a most frightful, horrid and disgusting spectacle, by which, he found that they had been divided into four parties before they were shot, as there were four piles, surrounded by torn pieces of bloody clothing, shoes, caps, pocket books and papers.—Among the rest was the bloody cap of FANNIN, which leads us to expect he was burnt or roasted with the others."
Such fiend-like brutality is unexampled in the history of modern ages, and deserves to be signalized, by the erection of a sable monument, on the apex of which should be seen the bleached bones of the Mexican Nero, pointing to his victims graves, telling to future generations what he once had been.

Honors to Madison.—A grand nocturnal procession is to be got up at Baltimore, to pay funeral honors to the illustrious MADISON.

The report of the committee appointed on the subject, says:

"In the opinion of your committee a nocturnal procession is the most solemn and at the same time the most impressive that can possibly be devised. The intermittent peal of cannon, the dull dead sound of the muffled bell, the blaze of a thousand torches, and the melancholy funeral music, should all, in the opinion of your committee, be united in performing the obsequies of the mighty dead."

OBITUARY.

COMMUNICATED.
Departed this life on the 17th ult., at the Red Sulphur Springs, Va. LEWIS CIPLES, Esq. in the 61st year of his age—a resident of this place for the last forty years.

"Thou art a mournful thing
O grave, thy shadow over all is thrown;
Man builds bright bowers in life's delightful spring
But thou canst throw them down.

"Thou' never hath passed an hour
Since earth was peopled with her numerous race
In which her children have not felt thy power
Thy gloomy dwelling place.

"Such is our mortal life,
All that have been, are now and still may be,
Must drop the burden of their human strife
And find their end in thee.

"Yet on times fleeting wings
A day shall come whose penetrating light
Shall bare the deepest of thy hidden things
To universal light.

"And thanks to golden faith
There is a land far hence, amid the sky,
Where a Deliverer has conquered Death,
Where Death, and thou shalt die.

"Tis there that we would go,
Oh is it not a glory-bearing shore;
Where flowers unsullied, by earth's breathing blow
And graves are dark no more."
